Online Financial Transparency Platform

The City of Los Alamitos has partnered with OpenGov to develop an online financial transparency platform, which provides financial data via the web in the form of interactive charts and graphs where users can evaluate ‘big picture’ trends and perform multi-year analysis at the click of a mouse. The intuitive design makes it easier to explore how taxpayer money is collected and spent. The website may be accessed at <https://losalamitosca.opengov.com/transparency>.

The website currently contains six years of revenue and expenditure data, which can be viewed and analyzed in a number of ways. Users can explore multiple views of financial data by fund, department, expense type or revenue type.

The City is very excited about this new service made available to the public via the City's website. Citizens and other interested parties such as bondholders and rating agencies will now be able to directly access and evaluate the City's revenues and expenditures by using this new easy-to-use interactive tool.

Mayor Richard D. Murphy added that the City of Los Alamitos is setting the standard for financial transparency by making its financial data easily assessable in an intuitive, digital format.
